Construction Issues and Opportunities During the COVID-19 Pandemic and Beyond

Richard Reizen

Construction

In this fourth installment of our Construction Interview Series on adapting to the COVID-19 pandemic, Rich Reizen and Pat Johnson, members of Gould & Ratner's Construction Practice, talk with Eric Nixon, President of Maron Electric, about a variety of issues and opportunities facing the industry, including current attempts to meet economic and regulatory demands, as well as future opportunities and solutions. Established in 1926, Maron Electric is one of Chicago's leading electrical contractors. With projects spanning across the greater Chicagoland area, Maron has experience working with both new construction and existing buildings for various markets including, hotels, conference centers, office and academic.
